A US district judge made the much-anticipated decision on Wednesday. Mr Suri was released on bond and will be able to return to Virginia.

"After months of sorrow, loss, and pain, when I saw my kids, it was like an oasis in the desert, and in their arms I found my life again. It was a surreal experience," he said shortly after his release.

Since President Donald Trump took office on January 20, his administration has turned a critical eye on students, scholars and professors expressing sympathy for Palestinians amid the continuing Israel-Gaza war.

Non-citizens in the US on visas have been detained and threatened with deportation by federal authorities.

Some are student protest organisers, others have simply written in support of Palestine.

In Mr Suri's case, his marriage to someone who had expressed support for Palestine was sufficient for the government to arrest him.

Pro-Palestinians are also being targeted by groups using artificial intelligence to expose them and report them to authorities.

The State Department reportedly hasn't ruled out using AI to help it revoke the visas of international students accused of supporting Hamas, again, often without due process or

US judge rules Mahmoud Khalil can be deported

▶ 01:18

Despite his legal team's arguments that Mr Khalil's right to free speech was violated and that he was apprehended without due process, Judge Jamee Comans disagreed. She said the government had demonstrated sufficiently Mr Khalil's presence in the US could have "potentially serious foreign policy consequences", therefore the case met the legal threshold for deportation.

Masked US immigration agents detain Turkish student over pro-Palestine activism

▶ 00:44

After spending six weeks in a Louisiana detention centre, Ms Ozturk's legal team secured a major victory by convincing a judge to order her release on the grounds US federal authorities had not provided evidence to justify her arrest. It is expected the Trump administration will challenge the ruling.
